Holiday Personality

The following description of your personality type is based on over three decades of personality research and refinement by Dr. Stanley C. Plog with about 200,000 travelers. It has been described in three books by Dr. Plog, articles in professional journals, chapters in tourism textbooks, and is also used by travel professionals to help them understand your unique needs when you travel.

Six personality types fit along a continuum. You should find that most of the description fits you quite well. But, since we are all still unique in many ways, some characteristics may be true of a majority of persons with your personality but not all. You may also want to read some of the other personality descriptions to see how you differ from others. You're free to browse through any of the personality types and you'll probably be able to identify the characteristics of people you know.

Click Here to Find Your Personality

Authentic:

If you examine the description of venturers, you will find a personality quite the opposite of yours. You prefer a life that is more structured, stable and predictable. You would rather follow some set patterns or routines in your life so that you are more likely to know what will happen during each day and, therefore, can plan or prepare for it much better.

Read more...

Mid-Authentic:

Laid back, calm, easygoing, happy-go-lucky, unruffled, untroubled, informal, unceremonious, casual, and carefree. A lot of these words probably apply to you. You've even heard them used by friends and associates to describe you in the past. Above all, you probably have been labeled as mellow, creating a feeling among friends that you are genial, calm in most of life's storms (at least on the surface), cordial.

Authentics:

Your actions are more predictable and dependable than is true of many people. Others know they can rely on you to do what you say because you follow through on your commitments. And, more than any other group, what others see on the surface reflects your true personality. You don't play games in dealing with friends and associates. A handshake is your word and you mean it. That's why I call you an authentic – you act the same with all people. Nothing fake about your personality. You also have the distinction of belonging to the smallest group, comprising just 3% of the population.

With a love of some consistency and predictability in your life, does it mean you lead a boring existence? Hardly! A sense of routine can make changes to your daily routine seem much more interesting and exciting. Besides, your calm and steady personality provides an extraordinarily important function in society. Through your commitment to consistency and honesty, you add stability to daily life of others around you, helping to keep society from being pulled off course by those who constantly want to change what is tried and true. Without your stability, there would be fewer lasting common values that serve as glue to society and give the nation a sense of direction and purpose.

At work, in your church (if you attend), or in your lodge group, you are often the one that people ask to do a task when they want it done right. Your relatively quiet and easygoing manner, coupled with your commitment to doing everything well, means that others know they don't have to continually check on you. You have qualities that many other people wish they had, but admit they don't have the patience to practice. Your travel habits tend to follow a more easy to understand pattern. You would rather go to places that have earned a well deserved reputation as being great, rather than experiment with more recently discovered and, potentially, less satisfying destinations.

These better known places offer much of what you want, including interesting things to do and predictable quality for hotels and restaurants. These well established destinations usually have major hotel chains at all price levels, a good selection of restaurants (particularly family style), and entertainment facilities that you may not have time to use very often back home, such as miniature golf courses, arcades, movie theaters, and established entertainers.
